Here are some options if you're on the market for Craigslist publishing software. Once you get past the overheated website and get to the tool itself, the CL Car Publishing Tool is actually pretty good. It has a very basic AI that divides the ad process into different steps that makes it easier to post multiple ads in multiple places. You can choose as many cities as you want, select multiple categories, and add HTML, rich text, images, and more. The tool will then publish to all selected locations using one or more e-mail addresses. Craigslist setting software 1.0.0.0 does exactly what it says on the lim. It's free, easy to use and does a credible job helping you create more Craigslist ads. Originally designed for a passionate poster property, you can post in any category in any city. This will even allow you to re-view ads that are flagged, which is a very useful perk. It's not fully featured or easy to use as a CL AutoPublishing Tool, but it's free and does a decent job. Craigslist Classified Ad Posting Utility is similar to the other two in the list, in that it allows you to post in multiple categories in multiple cities. It also allows HTML code to make your ads a little more appealing. AI is pretty basic and seems to be based on Microsoft Office, but it works. The program will also allow you to post on other classified websites if you wish, something that I do not think the previous two applications allow. I only played with Craigslist Classified Ad Posting Utility for a few minutes, but it seems to work all right. Of the four entries I listed here, Crayzilla has the best reputation. It's a suggested by a marketing friend of mine who uses it to post cars for clients. It has a clean AI with logical navigation, and can create Craigslist accounts as well as post multiple ads in multiple categories and do whatever it takes to do. This will allow you to post on multiple sites: Craigslist, eBay Classifieds and Backpage. There's also a useful scheduling feature that lets you drip ads for your feed to avoid spam tagging. Craigslist ads can be flagged or deleted for a multitude of reasons. Some we can do something about, but some we can't. For example, we can avoid automated flags with several techniques, but these techniques won't stop competitors tagging your ads to clear the way for their own. Unfortunately, these programs can do nothing to change the behavior of other people who use the website. These things often happen on Craigslist, especially in competitive categories. I can certainly help you avoid being tagged by Craigslist yourself, but I can't help you avoid ruthless competitors. In general, you can tell if this is due to the automated Craigslist systems that mark your ad or competitor by looking at how long the ad stays alive. If your ad goes live and makes it after two hours, it's passed automated verification. If it is marked for removal after this time period, it was a competitor. Unfortunately, there are as many programs that help flag ads as there are for creating them. This is just the price of doing business on Craigslist. If you plan to use Craigslist publishing software, you'll need other tools to help you succeed. You'll need a VPN from multiple U.S. city locations, or you'll need a proxy service that offers the same. One of the criteria that all ads are checked for is your IP address. Craigslist checks the IP address that publishes the ad to confirm that it is located in an area that is local in the city where the ad is placed. It will also verify your Craigslist account (if you have one) to check the cities you post. If you verified this account by phone, the number will also be checked as a local in that city. That's quite a series of checks! However, these checks are not safe, as anyone who spends longer than five minutes on the site can do. Things that shouldn't be there slip through the cracks all the time. Crayzilla, for example, uses IP rotation to work with these checks. Works together with proxies for publication from the IP addresses of local to the city where you publish. You need to sort the proxies, but once you've entered the IP address (es) for the city, they'll rotate them to be local and avoid tagging for multiple posts. High-quality Craigslist publishing software can also automatically create email addresses for each account and bypass Captcha, if enabled. The rest is up to you. You still need to get local phone numbers and set everything up. Although all of the above publishing software different, different, they all work about the same way. Now I'm going to walk you through how to set everything up and have it posted in multiple cities at once with minimal risk of being tagged or deleted by Craigslist yourself. Download and install your Craigslist publishing software of your choice. Sign in to a free or premium proxy provider that has proxies in the cities you want to publish. Get the phone numbers of every local town. There are service providers that provide this kind of service. Load proxies into Craigslist publishing software and link them to your own local account. If you have existing accounts, make sure they're using the proxy locally to their location. This is very important. Assign a local phone number to each account. The most common reason for tagging Craigslist ads is if your IP address or phone number isn't local in the city. For this reason, it is crucial to pay attention to creating an account, phone number and assigning proxies. Everyone should match the site and everyone should be usable. Craigslist doesn't always want to confirm by phone, but you never know which ad will be selected so it has to pass. If you have existing accounts, you must assign them a local proxy and phone number. For example, if you've already published using a specific LA account, the proxy and phone number you assign must be based in LA. Otherwise Craigslist will detect a discrepancy and could tick off your ad. According to Craigslist's ToS, you can post one ad around town for 48 hours each. If your Craigslist publishing software has a schedule, set it to fit those rules to avoid tagging if at all possible. However, the 48-hour rule is not set in stone, as the IP address could be part of a Café Wi-Fi network or corporate external address. However, this requires trial and error to see how often you can post in the city before tagging. You'll need to create five or six ad variations, along with images, but no URLs. You should make each ad as different as possible without losing your basic message. You should also ensure that they look like they were created manually. Include pictures if relevant. Keep your ad length appropriate for your category and be sure to avoid using any words Craigslist doesn't like. These changes change regularly, so check ToS before publishing. Some Craigslist publishing software includes spinners to help you randomize the ad, but they are rarely good. The more versions of ads you can create manually, the more changes they have to be left alone. Do not include URLs. They are usually immediately marked and have the lowest chance of success. If you need to add a URL, decompose it, or add several parentheses so it doesn't work as one. There is no doubt that Craigslist publishing software facilitates marketing on the site, but there is still a lot of work to be done to make it worthwhile. You must set up software, configure multiple proxies, and numbers, create multiple versions of ads, and struggle with tagging Even if you do everything right, there is still no guarantee that it will work, but you can maximize your chances. It takes time, patience and trial and error to get that balance right. But once you do, you have a reach of millions that will be exposed to the product or service you sell. If you can get through it all and still make money, you deserve it! that's!
